

Professional Licensure and Certification Disclosures

Some degree programs at Holmes Community College are designed to be terminal while others are designed for transfer. A terminal degree (typically an Associate's in Applied Science degree) is customarily for students who are looking to enter the workforce once they graduate from Holmes. A transfer degree (typically an Associate's in Arts degree) is customarily for students who plan to continue their studies by transferring their credits to a four-year college or university.

At this time, no determinations have been made as to whether these programs lead to licensure in all states.

The Professional Licensures and Certification Disclosures document provides details regarding licensure for both our terminal degree programs and for those potential professions associated with transfer degree programs. For more information, view the MCCB Professional Licensure Disclosures.